Heinz Wunderlich

A Remembrance One Year Later

By Jay Zoller

Beginnings

At a sophomore in high school, after seven years of piano lessons, I began my study of the organ with the organist at my family’s church. My teacher, David Whitehouse, was also a student—at the University of New Hampshire—and he did his best to impart to me the correct methods of playing the organ. In addition, he stimulated my interest by taking me, even before I had my own driver’s license, to hear concerts on the large organ at the Methuen Memorial Music Hall, which was about an hour’s drive away from my home in Durham.

My recollection of many of those recitals is hazy at best, often sitting in the front row so I would have a ringside view. However, one Friday night, I stayed in my memory like no other. October 20, 1961 at 8:30 pm—the program, which I saved, reads: Heinz Wunderlich, Organist, Jacobikirche, Hamburg. From my front-row seat on the right-hand side, I was transfixed as his program proceeded: Fux, Prelude and Fugue in C Minor, Bach, Trio Sonata III in D Minor and Toccata and Fugue in F Major. After intermission he played his transcription of Scarlatti’s Sonata K. 175, which, little could I imagine at the time, I would know intimately later in my life. Wunderlich ended his program with the Reger Fantasie and Fugue on A-C-G. For whatever reasons, the image I had of him there would remain with me.

1989

My story now jumps ahead nearly thirty years. I was working for theComposer Corporation in Cambridge, Massachusetts, designing pipe organs. We had just finished a small two-manual organ of my design for St. Paul’s Episcopal Church in North Andover, Mass., and was devoting his time to concertizing as well as choral music. He was disagreeable with Arthur Howells. In addition to the recital, a masterclass was held to be shown the day before. I was one of five or six people who were to play. I did not realize this was the man that I had heard play so many years before. Nor did I think about the fact that he was a recognized authority on the music of Bach! So, imagine my embarrassment when I played the C Major Prelude and Fugue of Johann Ludwig Krebs rather than Bach.

Despite being unfamiliar with the music, Professor Wunderlich was most gracious and offered helpful advice on many aspects of the piece. I still have his markings in my score. I was fortunate to see a program of the next day’s recital and was told that it included one of his own pieces, the Sonata on a Single Theme. I asked him about his music and if it was published. Alas, nothing was published at that time, but he was very kind and brought me a cassette recording of some of his organ works. When I listened to it later, I was amazed! It became one of his most listened-to recordings in my collection. The music had a clear crispness to it; it was a fresh sound—a controlledwildness was it come alive for me. I couldn’t stop listening. It sounded the way contemporary organ writing ought to be.

I waited, hoping that it was being published, and finally wrote to Professor Wunderlich roughly two years later. I identified myself as the person who had played Krebs for him at Dartmouth. Yes, he remembered me. And, yes some of the organ works were now published. I immediately ordered every one. The first piece that I learned was the sonata. I had heard him play, the Sonata on a Single Theme. I quickly discovered how difficult the music actually is to play. I expect. I wrote to him and told him what I was working on, asking questions about the music and the way he wanted it performed. Occasionally, I even discovered a wrong note in the score. I would send him my recital programs when I had included a piece of his and he always answered; and at the same time he answered my questions and thanked me for them.

Over the years I played quite a few of his pieces, even playing one lunchtime all-Wunderlich concert. As 1999 grew near, Wunderlich asked me to write an article about him in honor of his approaching 80th birthday. I did so and my article “Heinz Wunderlich: 80” appeared in the April 1999 issue of The American Organist. I had also made the decision to travel to Hamburg, Germany, for his birthday celebrations and so bought my ticket expecting to have a relaxed trip.

Birthday celebrations

I had played the Fuga Variata in a recital two months before my scheduled trip, but had no inkling of the phone call I was about to receive, literally the day before I was to leave. Heinz Wunderlich called from Germany to say that the organist who was scheduled to play the Fuga Variata was unable to do so, had backed out, and would I be willing to play? I was soon to discover that Wunderlich’s birthday celebrations consisted of many concerts over the period of nearly two weeks. In 1999 Heinz Wunderlich played an all-Bach recital on the Org Schrinner organ at St. Jacobis, five days later he played another all-Bach program of harpsichord and violin with his violinist wife, Nelly, at the Museum of Art. One day later was an all-Wunderlich program played by former students at the Domiche St. Mariens on the four-manual Beckerath organ. And finally, on May 8 Heinz Wunderlich played an ambitious program of Reger and Wunderlich.

Without promising anything, and with my heart in my throat, I said I would bring my music and organ shoes and we would see what happened. When I arrived, I practiced for a couple of days on Wunderlich’s own three-manual organ, which was on the lower level of his home. I was still feeling insecure about the music when Wunderlich came down and wanted me to play the piece. In my nervousness, I must have played very badly, but he was always kind and offered suggestions. Finally, he took me to St. Mariens for a lunchtime. In the end, I did not feel that I could perform the music so late in life. But, sometimes things work out differently than you expect. I wrote to him and told him what I was working on, asking questions about the music and the way he wanted it performed. Occasionally, I even discovered a wrong note in the score. I would send him my recital programs when I had included a piece of his and he always answered; and at the same time he answered my questions and thanked me for them.

In Memoriam

THE DIAPASON

APRIL 2013 WWW.THEDIAPASON.COM

Heinz Wunderlich at 85th birthday celbration after his Bach concert

Come to Washington. Take Part...

to the premier event of the year for clergy, laypeople, and musical students of all types and levels of skill.

Choose from more than 125 learning opportunities led by respected clinicians, teaching workshops, institute weekends, master classes, and other Enjoy outstanding musical events featuring a wide variety of genres—choral, contemporary organ, brass, brassband, African Americans, and Latinos/Hispanics.

Celebrate the125th anniversary of the Second Vatican Council’s landmark Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy and hear thought-provoking addresses on the continuing significance of that document. Presenters include Alla Perretta, Johan Huizinga, ajq, Paul Turner, and Bernardine Barrett.

Take advantage of generous discounts for clergy-students class, parish groups, and youth. Register by the advance registration deadline of June 25 and save 30% off the regular registration fee.

Web: www.npm.org Toll-free 1 (800) 207-0299

Participation Literacy Convention

36th Annual Convention

National Association of Pastoral Musicians

36th Annual Convention

July 19–29, 2013

In Memoriam
next section, always checking on what it sounded like downstairs. I learned a lot about his ideas of registration and playing in an acoustically live building. Heinz Wunderlich was very precise. He wanted all of my old markings erased. Changes and balances were carefully worked out as well as precise fingerings, paying attention to every marking in the score.

I was thankful for the time and attention he was willing to give me, all this at the age of 80 and having several concerts of his own to prepare. At the same time it was terrifying to be performing with the composer himself sitting in the audience. For me it was the experience of a lifetime.

Later that year, I arranged an American tour for him. It included five concerts at churches where former students were playing and a concert at the Methuen Memorial Music Hall where I had heard him play 38 years before. Among other things, he played his newly composed Sonata über Jona; his wife Nelly joined him for his Variationa Twelvetonata for Violin and Organ, also newly composed, and some Rheinberger sonatas for violin and organ, which brought tears to my eyes. For his 85th birthday in 2004 I wrote another article about him, this time published in Choir & Organ magazine, and once again traveled to Hamburg to play his newly written Emotion and Fugue in the all-Wunderlich program. This program was again on a large four-manual Beckerath, but this time in St. Petri, where former student Thomas Dahl is the director of music. Again, Heinz Wunderlich was of great assistance with interpretation and registration.

In 2009, for Wunderlich’s 90th birthday, I again played the Fuga Variata on the Kemper Organ along with other former students. Although Professor Wunderlich was noticeably frail, he still played an ambitious recital on the Kemper Organ at St. Jacobis. Unfortunately, it was the last time I would hear him play.

Epilogue

For me, knowing Heinz Wunderlich, one of the 20th century’s greatest virtuosos, became a transforming event in my life. To know the man, the gentle teacher, the consummate musician, the loving husband and father, gracious host, and the appreciation he had for my performances and articles, was reward in itself. But the real transformative aspect was the music. My interest in contemporary music expanded tenfold. His organ works alone have occupied me for over 20 years and constantly present me with ever-new challenges. In addition, I have been able to listen to performances of works that I will never play—works for organ and orchestra, for chorus, and his masterful improvisations. His interest has also given me the chance to travel to Germany and perform on organs that I had only dreamed of, as well as make many new friends. Thank you, dear man. I miss you.

Jay Zoller is organist at South Parish Congregational Church in Augusta, Maine, where he plays the church’s historic 1866 E. & G. G. Hook organ. He holds degrees from the University of New Hampshire and the School of Theology at Boston University. A retired designer for the Andover Organ Company, he currently designs for the Organ Clearing House and for David E. Wallace & Co. Pipe Organ Builders of Gorham, Maine. Zoller resides in Newcastle, Maine, with his wife Rachel. In addition to writing several articles about Heinz Wunderlich for The American Organist, Choir & Organ, and The Diapason, he has played in all-Wunderlich recitals in Hamburg, Germany in 1999, 2004, and 2009. His article, “An Organ Adventure in South Korea,” appeared in the December 2011 issue of The Diapason.