THE DIAPASON Team

As organists, The Diapason team members were subscribers before they joined the staff and shaped The Diapason's future. If you haven't yet met our dedicated team, meet them here and now.

JEROME BUTERA

served as editor and publisher of The Diapason for 30 years.

He taught organ and liturgical music at DePaul University for 35 years, and was organist and music director at churches in Michigan, Indiana and Illinois for 50 years. He holds advanced degrees from the University of Michigan and the American Conservatory of Music, and has played concerts for the American Guild of Organists and Organ Historical Society. jbutera@sgcmail.com; 608.634.6253 has served as a church musician in several states and denominations.

JEROME BUTERA

STEPHEN SCHNURR

He has numerous publications to his credit, primarily on subjects related to the pipe organ in the Great Lakes states. He also teaches organ at the university level. Schnurr has a commitment to engaging the next generation in church music and the organ, not only through teaching and leading students to sing in venues beyond the local church, but also by endeavoring to spotlight news and articles about upcoming leaders in the world of the organ, church music, harpsichord, and carillon.

Maximize your marketing investment with our unique sponsorship opportunities. Engage with the next generation and reach a global audience.

GRUENSTEIN AWARD

In May 2020, The Diapason announced its first recipient of the biennial Gruenstein Award, recognizing the scholarly work of a young author who had not reached their 35th birthday, Alexander Meszler. The recipient of the second Gruenstein Award, Colin MacKnight, was announced in May 2022. Nominations for the third Gruenstein Award are open through January 31, 2024. Look for additional details on this exciting honor in upcoming issues.

ABOUT OUR FOUNDER

The story of the founder of our magazine brings a love for music and the written word into harmony. We were eager to pay homage to his memory beginning with the occasion of the 110th anniversary of THE DIAPASON with an award recognizing young journalists. In doing so, we wanted to share background, with the hope of inspiring the new generation of scholarly writers.

Siegfried Emanuel Gruenstein was born March 26, 1877, in Charlestown, Indiana, the son of a Reformed Church minister who served congregations in Indiana, Pennsylvania, and Iowa. Through Siegfried's family life, he first experienced and was drawn to a life in church music.

He attended Lake Forest College in Lake Forest, Illinois, an institution that remained close to his heart throughout his life. Siegfried would play organ for college events for more than three decades, and was awarded an honorary Master of Arts degree from the college for his service to music. He served as organist to First Presbyterian Church of Lake Forest from 1891 until 1939. He presented recitals throughout the United States, and it has been noted that "he played more society weddings than any other organist."

Journalism ran through his blood just as much as music. He served on the staff of the Chicago Evening Post from 1895 to 1909 and was telegraph editor of the Chicago Daily News from 1909 until 1917. As noted in THE DIAPASON, January 1, 1958, "The real dominating element in his whole life was THE DIAPASON, which he founded experimentally in 1909 more as an act of faith and love than with the hope of worldly success." Mr. Gruenstein died December 6, 1957, but his legacy continues with THE DIAPASON, more than a century after its first issue was printed in December 1909.

FURTHERING THE INDUSTRY

The Diapason's biennial 20 Under 30 awards program honors 20 of the future industry leaders who are already making a difference in their commitment to music and to their community. Our next 20 Under 30 awards will be announced in May of 2025.

SPONSORSHIPS: Advertisers have the opportunity to sponsor a congratulatory ad in the May 2025 issue. For more information on sponsoring this unique awards program, contact Sales Director Jerome Butera at jbutera@sgcmail.com.
